A REMARKABLE WOMAN.

Mme. Roland and Her Tragic Role in the French Revolution.

Mme. Roland was one of the noblest examples of womanhood of her age. A child of poverty, she gradually grew to distinction, until she wielded for a time the mighty scepter which afterward led her captive to the guillotine and finally to the guillotine. In the cause of reform she was the center of all influence around which clustered those mighty spirits which seemed for a time to control the destinies of France.

In early youth she showed signs of possessing great talent. "Plutarch's Lives" gave her an almost passionate longing for the fame of the great men of past ages, and at the age of fourteen she is said to have wept because she was not a Roman or a Spartan woman.

At length the outburst came—the French struggle for liberty in 1789—so soon to degenerate into ruthless anarchy. Mme. Roland and her husband joined the Girondist party. M. Roland became minister of the Interior. Mme. Roland assisted him in drawing up official papers, and to her pen is attributed the celebrated warning letter to the king, published in May, 1792, which occasioned his dismissal.

Roland denounced the more fiery revolutionists, and Robespierre, Marat, Danton and the rest became very bitter, particularly toward Mme. Roland. The lives of herself and her husband were not considered safe, and arrangements were made for them to sleep away from their regular home. Mme. Roland objected. "I am ashamed of the part I am made to play," she said. "I will neither disguise myself or leave the house. If they wish to assassinate me, it shall be at my own house."

The crisis came. On May 31, 1793, she was arrested and cast into prison, and being at the time away from Paris. She never obtained her liberty or saw her husband. All her jailers she converted into friends by her fascinating manner and general amiability. She devoted all her leisure hours in prison to the composition of her memoirs.

On Oct. 16 Marie Antoinette was guillotined. Later in the same month twenty of the leading Girondists, all personal friends of the Rolands, shared the same fate. And then came the turn of Mme. Roland.

At the trial Mme. Roland appeared dressed carefully in white, with her beautiful black hair descending to her waist. Unmoved by the insults to which she was subjected by her brutal judges, she maintained unruffled a dignified demeanor which might have suited a Roman matron of old, but her death was predetermined, and she was remorselessly condemned.

On the fatal day and at the same hour and place with herself a man was to be guillotined. To die first on such an occasion had become a sort of privilege among the wretched victims as a means of avoiding the agony of seeing others die. Mme. Roland waived this privilege in favor of her less courageous companion. The executioner had orders to guillotine her before the man, but she entreated him not to show the impoliteness of refusing a woman's last request.

As she passed to the scaffold she gazed on a gigantic statue of Liberty erected near it and exclaimed, "O Liberty, how many crimes are committed in thy name!" The guillotine then took the life of one who was perhaps the most remarkable woman of the French revolution.—St. Louis Republic.

DRY SHAMPOO POPULAR

A local druggist is authority for the statement that most every woman and many men, are using the popular "villane-orris root dry shampoo." "It is becoming a craze," he says, "because of the quickly perceptible effect on the hair and scalp. It simply transforms an ordinary oily, stringy, dandruff-encrusted head of hair into a most beautiful lustrous, fluffy and clean one. Mix together six ounces of powdered orris root and two ounces of antiseptic villane powder. Keep in a jar or box and frequently distribute a tablespoonful through the hair. Let remain several hours or a night and then comb and brush thoroughly."

A FAIRLY BIG TREE.

The One McDougall Said Was Blown Down In Venezuela.

Wait McDougall, the caricaturist, was sitting in the Friars' club in New York one night discussing everything in particular when the subject of big trees came up, one of the party claiming that he saw the stump of a red cedar in California so large that 200 people danced on it at the same time.

"I grant you they have some big trees in California," said McDougall, "but listen to this one. My uncle, who owns a very large ranch in Venezuela, went out one morning after a heavy windstorm and found that a huge cottonwood on the bank of the river had blown down, the branches of which were resting on the other side. He also discovered that 3,000 of his cattle were missing and on searching found the missing stock on the other side of the river. An investigation quickly followed, when they found to their surprise that the tree was hollow, which afforded a bridge across the river, through which the cattle strayed. After the men had succeeded in driving the stock back through the trunk of the tree it was found that thirty-six of the steers were missing. Another vigorous search was made, and where do you suppose we found them?" asked Wait.

"Heaven knows," said the red cedar man. "Where?"

"They had strolled off in the hollow branches of the tree," said McDougall. —New York Telegraph.
